The San Francisco Board of Supervisors on Tuesday approved, on first reading, an ordinance adopting an unassisted aerial vehicle (drone) policy for the San Francisco Police Department, amid debate about possible conflicts with state law and how Proposition E interacts with the board's oversight role.

Supporters said the policy includes privacy and safety protections; opponents said the department had already used drones without clear legal authorization and that inviting court challenges could undermine prosecutions or civil liberties.

Supervisor Preston (member, San Francisco Board of Supervisors) said the revised policy addressed several priorities raised by civil-rights advocates and assured that drones would not be used as weapons. "These drones are not equipped, or allowed to
