Hundreds of people marched and rallied for hours on Sunday, calling for both a ceasefire in Gaza and to protect the city's People's Park, which as of this week is now barricaded for housing construction. Alyssa Goard reports.

Hundreds of people marched and rallied for hours on Sunday, calling for both a ceasefire in Gaza and to protect the city's People's Park, which as of this week is now barricaded for housing construction.

Demonstrators marched, chanted, and played music along Telegraph Avenue near U.C. Berkeley.

Some of their regular refrains included, "free, free Palestine!" and "when People's Park is under attack, what do we do? Stand up, fight back!"

Bay Area resident and Palestinian American Nida L. participated in the protest.

She said, "I see the people asking for a ceasefire, I see the people asking for peace, and I see the people asking for an end to occupation, so I hope our representatives can begin representing the people and what they're asking for."

Of the barricading and construction of People's Park, she said, "It's a disgrace what they've done to it."
